About Beijing

Beijing is the capital of the People's Republic of China and one of the most populous cities in the world. Beijing is the second largest city in China by urban population after Shanghai and the population as of 2013 was 21,150,000. Beijing has a total of 14 districts and 2 counties. Beijing is the China's political, cultural, and educational center. Beijing Capital International Airport is the second busiest in the world by passenger traffic. There are three hills to be found in the city limits and mountains surround the capital on three sides. Beijing has a monsoon-influenced continental climate with hot, humid summers and cold, dry winters. Beijing is the political center of China where the Party's Central Committee, the State Council, ministries and commissions under the government, and more than 140 foreign embassies are located. It is also an international exchange center. Beijing hosted the Olympic Games in 2008. The main attractions of the city are the world's longest wall and biggest ancient architecture

The Great Wall of China, The world's largest palace The Forbidden City, Northern terminus of China's Grand Canal.

Changes have been taking place day by day in Beijing as China's deepening reform and opening-up. As a popular saying going around here, Beijing is growing taller with more massive buildings springing up, greener with trees and grass covered all over the city and younger with people leading a richer and more colorful life in Beijing. It has full confidence to advance at a greater pace in the 21st century. This is Beijing, old as well as young, full of charm. It is our sincere hope that you will make best use of your time here to see around. We believe that you will harvest a lot.
