About Munich, Germany

Munich, Bavaria's capital, is located at the river Isar in the south of Bavaria. It is one of the most prosperous and fastest growing cities in Germany and is a top-ranked destination for migration and expatriate location, despite of being the municipality with the highest density of population which is more than 1.4 million, making it the third populous city in Germany. Greater Munich which also includes its suburbs has a population of 2.6 million. Munich is famous for its beautiful architectural attractions, fine culture, international sports events, exhibitions, conferences and the annual Oktoberfest beer celebration. Munich is home to many national and international authorities, major universities, major museums and theaters. Though it was heavily damaged during World War II, many of its historic buildings have been rebuilt. Munich's city climate lies between the humid continental climate and the oceanic climate. The city center lies between both climates, whereas the airport of Munich has a humid continental climate. The warmest month of the year is July and the coolest month is January.

Munich is a major international center of business, engineering, research and medicine illustrated by the presence of two research universities, the headquarters of several multinational companies and the world-class technology and science museums like the Deutsches Museum and BMW Museum. It is Germany's most prosperous city and repeatedly into the top 10 of global quality of life rankings. Munich's ability to stay at the frontline of technological developments and maintain its cultural heritage is often compiled in the assumption as a city of laptops and lederhosen.
