Modern ambulatory care clinics face not only clinical, but operational challenges. Human-centered design thinking can be applied to react to these challenges and ideate real-world sustainable processes to develop solutions that benefit both the organization as well as the patient.