MARKET ANALYSIS

Anesthesia is a medication used to prevent pain during surgery, classified into general, regional, and local types. The anesthesiology market includes both anesthesia drugs and trained anesthesiologists. Specialized equipment like vaporizers and oxygen sets are used in procedures. While anesthesia provides pain relief, it can cause side effects like nausea, sore throat, headaches, and back pain. Sedation is most common in patients aged 50-75 in the United States.

The global anesthetic monitoring devices market was valued at USD 808.7 million in 2019, driven by increased safety awareness and a rising number of surgeries. In 2014, the CDC reported a total of 51.4 million surgeries performed in the U.S, with the American Society of Plastic Surgeons noting a 3.0% increase in plastic surgery procedures.

With advancements in surgery and a growing geriatric population—expected to rise from 12.0% in 2015 to 22.0% by 2050—the demand for perioperative monitoring is set to increase, fueling growth in the anesthetic monitoring devices market.The global general anesthesia drugs market is expected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 3.8% during the forecast period, with the market value projected to reach approximately USD 5,549.7 million by the end of 2025.
