MARKET ANALYSIS

By 2028, the market for dental implants and prosthetics, which was valued at USD 10.57 billion in 2020, is expected to have grown to USD 17.44 billion, with a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 6.97% between 2021 and 2028. Due to rising cases of dental caries, periodontal illnesses, tooth loss, expanding discretionary income, rising dental tourism, and a booming aesthetic industry, the global market for dental prosthesis is expanding. The World Health Organization (WHO) projected those oral disorders impacted roughly 3.58 billion people worldwide in 2016. From 2022 to 2030, the market for dental prosthesis is projected to increase at a rate of 11.6%, reaching USD 29.6 billion by that time.

ABOUT VENUE

Modern pressures have perhaps inhibited the extensive street life for which Madrid has been famous, although people still live very much in the streets, especially during the intense heat of summer when the café terraces fill, and people stroll up and down in the evenings. Modern culture, in the form of film, theatre, and music, is extensively represented, as is to be expected in a city with several major universities and academies. Nearly 770 million euros were invested in R&D by the biotechnology industry, with enterprises that only employ biotechnology as a production tool making up most of that investment (71% of the total). Madrid is home to Spain's National Centre for Biotechnology, which serves as the nation's primary biotechnology research hub. With the biggest multinationals present in the industry, the Spanish biotechnology business has intriguing potential for co-development. Furthermore, the country will benefit from the ambitious climate goals, green investment strategy, and food sustainability initiatives of the European Union (EU).
