Market Analysis

Cancer is a group of diseases which involves the growth of abnormal cells beyond their boundaries, with a potential to invade other organs. Cancer is being reported to be the 2nd leading cause of death in the world and is estimated to account for about 18.1 million new cases and 9.6 million deaths in 2018. It is also estimated that the total annual economic cost of cancer was USD 1.16 trillion in 2010. According to the current scenario, it is said that 30%- 50% of cancer could be prevented by avoiding key risk factors. According to the most recent report on the status of cancer, it is said that the overall cancer death rates continue to decrease in men, women and children.

In recent times, there is a major push in the cancer diagnostics market industry, with cancer diagnostics market drawing attention globally. It is North America that dominates the global cancer diagnostics market now, followed by Europe. It is also expected that the emerging economies of Asia-Pacific, Latin America, Middle East and Africa would also undergo a drastic growth in cancer diagnostics market.

It is expected that the global cancer diagnostics market size would reach USD 250.3 billion by 2026 with a CAGR of about 7.2 %. It is also reported that the global medical imaging market is expected to generate about USD 48.6 billion by 2025, with a CAGR of 5.2%. It is also expected that the global cancer therapeutics market would grow to USD 182 billion by 2023 with a CAGR of 7.3%.

Although cancer has likely been around, over the years, our ability to test and combat the disease has been greatly improved. Research has paved way for advances in clinical practice at an accelerated pace, offering notable improvements. Persistent efforts have made way to escalate the number of FDA approved cancer therapies. These efforts lead to the development of more effective and less toxic treatments, such as targeted therapies, immunotherapies, cancer vaccines, etc improving cancer care.
