MARKET ANALYSIS

North America will represent more than 43% of worldwide revenues in 2021. The regional market is anticipated to maintain its leadership during the projection period while expanding at a steady CAGR. Some of the main factors driving regional market expansion include the increased incidence of skin cancer and other skin conditions including eczema and rosacea, as well as the expanding acceptance of cosmetic procedures. At some point in their lives, 80% of Americans will experience acne vulgaris, and 20% of those people will experience severe acne, which can cause long-term health and psychological harm.

The demand for minimally invasive aesthetic procedures, particularly in developed countries, is expected to increase by more than 9.6 percent between 2016 and 2028. Product development that provides a high level of customer experience also has a positive impact on demand during the forecasted period.
