MARKET ANALYSIS

Recycling is the process of converting waste into fresh materials and goods. It is a substitute for a traditional garbage disposal that can help preserve resources and reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Additionally, it can limit the use of new raw materials and stop the waste of potentially usable materials, reducing energy use, air pollution (from incineration), and water contamination (from landfilling). In the "Reduce, Reuse, and Recycle" waste hierarchy, recycling is the third and crucial element of contemporary trash reduction.

According to the Bureau of International recycling, waste metals are used in close to 45% of stainless-steel manufacturing worldwide. Similarly, half of the 400 million tons of new paper generated year is made from recycling board and paper.

Due to the negative effects of the economic crisis and changes in the global economy, the metal recycling business has experienced a significant transformation. Along with the need for automobiles, manufactured products, and buildings, metal and scrap metal are in higher demand. According to the report, 7.7 billion tons of plastic are produced annually across the world, of which 5.4 billion tons are not recycled. By 2025, the market in the Asia Pacific area is expected to be worth more than US$ 450 million, with China being a significant source of income. recycling PET bottles typically include garbage collection, sorting, shredding, and moulding processes. Over the projected period of 2018-2023, Market Research Future (MRFR) predicts a CAGR of 5.28% in the worldwide PET bottle recycling market. The market for recycling PET bottles was estimated to be around USD 4,381.3 Mn in 2017 and is anticipated to be worth USD 5,933.6 Mn by the end of 2023.
