About Pharmaceutics and Nanomedicine

PULSUS

Pharmaceutics

Pharmaceutics is the discipline of pharmacy that deals with all facets of the process of turning a New Chemical Entity (NCE) into a safe and effective medication. Pharmaceutics is the study and design of drug formulation for optimum delivery, stability, pharmacokinetics, and patient acceptance.

The pharmaceutical industry is therefore seeking other areas of serious growth, like exports, emerging markets, partnerships in research, biotechnology and life sciences and personalised medicine, so as to take care of its high value to the French economy. In response to the continued global COVID-19 pandemic, the pharmaceutical industry has mobilised to combat the virus. European Pharmaceutical Review's COVID-19 hub collates the newest industry news, including the progress of clinical trials, global collaboration efforts and therefore the impact of the virus on the world as a whole.

Nanomedicine

Researchers are currently developing ways to use nanoparticles to delivery medications directly to specific cells.

This is especially promising for the treatment of cancer cells, as chemotherapy and radiation treatments can cause damage to affected and healthy cells. Scientists are just beginning to understand the true potential of nanoparticles as well as the potential dangers.

The applications of nanotechnology in the field of medicine have the potential to increase life spans, diagnose and treat disease more effectively and provide therapies that closely mimic the body's natural health processes.

Take a chance to grab the oppourtunity with your peers, exchange expertise and experiences, and arm yourself with the latest information to take your department to the next level.
