MARKET ANALYSIS

During the projection period, the Data Science Platform market is expected to increase from USD 95.3 billion in 2021 to USD 322.9 billion in 2026, with a Compound Annual Growth Rate (CAGR) of 27.7%. The Data Science Platform industry is driven by the astounding growth of big data, but also by the rising adoption of cloud-based solutions, the growing use of data science platforms in various industries, and the growing need to extract in-depth insights from voluminous data to gain a competitive advantage.

Due to the rise of social media, IoT, and multimedia, which have produced an overwhelming flow of data in either structured or unstructured format, the volume of data gathered by enterprises is constantly expanding. For example, in the last two years alone, about 90% of the world's data has been created. Machine-generated as well as human-generated data is growing at a rate ten times faster than traditional commercial data. Machine data, for example, is growing at a 50-fold quicker rate than human data. Consumer data is generally consumer-driven and oriented. The majority of the world's data is generated by consumers, who are increasingly 'always-on.' Most people these days spend 4–6 hours per day using a range of gadgets and (social) applications to consume and generate data. New data is created in a database somewhere around the world with every click, swipe, or communication. Because everyone now has a smartphone in their pocket, the amount of data created is staggering.
