MARKET ANALYSIS

The global medical imaging market is projected to experience substantial growth, increasing from $37.97 billion in 2021 to $56.53 billion by 2028, with a CAGR of 5.8% during the forecast period. However, in 2020, the market saw a decline of -1.3% due to the impact of COVID-19. North America recorded a market size of $11.03 billion in 2020, driven by a rising number of patients undergoing diagnostic imaging procedures. Europe is expected to grow significantly, fueled by well-established healthcare facilities and an aging population. The US leads in MRI system installations per million populations, while Asia-Pacific is set to register the highest growth rate due to a growing prevalence of chronic diseases and increasing demand for advanced diagnostic devices. The increasing prevalence of chronic conditions, such as cancer and cardiovascular diseases, is a key driver of market growth. Integrating AI with medical imaging is a notable trend, enhancing diagnostic procedures.
