MARKET ANALYSIS

The healthcare system in France operates as a national health service, regionally administered to ensure healthcare access for all residents. French citizens and foreign nationals holding a valid residence permit are eligible for comprehensive universal coverage through this system, known as the Servizio Sanitario Nazionale (SSN) in Italian.

Funded primarily through national and regional taxes, the system also receives some support from private sources, though private insurance is less common in France. In 2021, healthcare spending accounted for 9.5% of France's GDP, with approximately 75% of the total funded by the public sector.

Healthcare System and Professionals

Resource allocation, healthcare delivery, and service promotion are managed at the regional level, while the national government sets overall healthcare policies and standards. This decentralized structure, however, can lead to regional variations in healthcare accessibility and quality.

Patients typically enter the healthcare system through family physicians, or general practitioners (GPs), with pediatricians serving as the primary contact for those under sixteen. France also boasts one of the highest physician densities globally, with an average of 4.1 doctors per 1,000 people.
