About Nanomedicine

Nanomedicine is the medical application of nanotechnology. Nanomedicine ranges from medical applications of nanomaterials and biological equipment, to nanoelectronic biosensors, and even future applications of molecular nanotechnology, such as biomachines. The current topic of nanomedicine involves understanding issues related to the toxicity and environmental impact of nanomaterials (structures at the nanoscale, that is, one billionth of a meter).

Functionality can be added to nanomaterials by connecting nanomaterials with biomolecules or structures. The size of nanomaterials is similar to that of most biomolecules and structures; therefore, nanomaterials can be used for in vivo and in vitro biomedical research and applications. So far, the combination of nanomaterials and biology has led to the development of diagnostic equipment, contrast agents, analytical tools, physiotherapy applications, and drug delivery vehicles.

Nanomedicine seeks to provide a set of valuable clinically useful equipment and research tools in the near future. The National Nanotechnology Program anticipates new commercial applications in the pharmaceutical industry, which may include advanced drug delivery systems, new therapies, and in vivo imaging. Is receiving funding from the National Institutes of Health Mutual Fund Program, which supports four nanomedicine development centers

About City and Venue

London is the capital and largest city of both England and the United Kingdom.It is located on the Thames River in south-east England, at the head of a 50-mile (80-kilometer) estuary that leads to the North Sea,and has been a major settlement for two millennia. The ancient core and financial centre of London, the City of London, was founded by the Romans as Londinium and retains mediaeval boundaries. Since the nineteenth century, “London” has also referred to the metropolitan area surrounding this core, historically divided between the counties of Middlesex, Essex, Surrey, Kent, and Hertfordshire. The City of Westminster, to the west of the City of London, has housed the national government for centuries.

London, as one of the world’s global cities, wields significant influence in the arts, commerce, education, entertainment, fashion, finance, health care, media, tourism, and communications, and is thus sometimes referred to as the world’s capital. Its GDP makes it the largest urban economy in Europe, and it is one of the world’s major financial centres. It had the second-highest number of ultra-high-net-worth individuals in Europe after Paris in 2019 and the second-highest number of billionaires of any city in Europe after Moscow. It has the highest concentration of higher education institutions in Europe, with Imperial College London specialising in natural and applied sciences, the London School of Economics specialising in social sciences, and the comprehensive University College London. The city has the most 5-star hotels of any city on the planet.

The Tower of London, Kew Gardens, the combined Palace of Westminster, Westminster Abbey, and St Margaret’s Church, and the historic settlement of Greenwich, where the Royal Observatory, Greenwich is a World Heritage Site in London that defines the Prime Meridian (0° longitude) and Greenwich Mean Time. Buckingham Palace, the London Eye, Piccadilly Circus, St Paul’s Cathedral, Tower Bridge, and Trafalgar Square are also notable landmarks. It is home to a plethora of museums, galleries, libraries, and sporting venues, including the British Museum, National Gallery, Natural History Museum, Tate Modern, British Library, and West End theatres. The London Underground is the world’s oldest rapid transit system.
