MARKET ANALYSIS

Since the 1970s the demand for natural products has been increasing steadily. The industry as a whole continues to flourish with a sharp surge in sales of natural products. Market development seems more effective in the mass channels. From mid-2015 to mid-2019, increasing demand enhanced sales growth for natural products by an average of 6.5 percent per year, while market and product mix shifts contributed an average of another 1.2 percent per year to revenue growth. That adds up to an average compound growth rate (CAGR) of 7.7 per cent for the natural products market. This output stands in strong contrast to that of conventional CPG products, which tried to eke out an aggregate CAGR of 0.6 percent just because market and commodity mix shifts increased revenue by 1.4 percent each year, minimizing an estimated annual decrease of 0.8 percent in unit selling revenue.

The research provides a comprehensive systematic overview of current demand and estimates for 2014–2022, which seeks to define the leading business prospects for market capitalization.

Geographically speaking, the demand for natural products was segmented into North America, Europe, Asia Pacific and LAMEA. Asia-Pacific has the highest demand growth projected at CAGR 22.9 per cent over the projection period, while North America retains the largest market share and is predicted to maintain market domination by 2022. The demand for Asia-Pacific organic products is expected to grow over the projected period with a prolific CAGR of 16.3 per cent.
