MARKET ANALYSIS

The neonatal intensive care market is poised for significant expansion due to increased preterm births, a surge in neonatal chronic conditions, and advancements in care technology. Asia experiences a high rate of low birth weight babies. Hospitals are adopting advanced systems to improve neonatal care. Yet, challenges persist in developing countries with limited awareness and economic constraints and in developed nations with declining birth rates. The ongoing impact of the COVID-19 pandemic also affects the market, with concerns about infection.

The neonatal intensive care market is expected to expand due to higher preterm birth rates, increased neonatal chronic diseases, and advanced care devices. However, limited awareness, economic constraints in developing nations, and declining birth rates in developed countries hinder market growth.
