Market Analysis

PULSUS
WWW.PULSUSCONFERENCE.COM

During the forecast period, the global palliative care market is expected to develop at a significant pace of 8%, rising from USD 3.18 billion in 2019 to USD 6.10 billion in 2027.

Palliative care is a type of specialist healthcare for people who are suffering from life-threatening illnesses. Patients receive such therapies from qualified healthcare personnel in order to properly cope with their illnesses. Counselling sessions are provided to the patient's family members in order to help them cope with their loss. These treatments are designed to help patients find the courage and fortitude they need to complete basic everyday tasks while also dealing with life-threatening diseases. The care plan includes spiritual and psychological components in addition to medical assistance. Palliative care is used to treat people with life-threatening illnesses such Alzheimer's, Parkinson's, renal disease, and Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis (ALS). The treatments offered in palliative care help with issues like insomnia, nausea, sadness, anxiety, shortness of breath, and constipation.

Due to the growing healthcare industry and the growing senior population, Europe is expected to hold a significant proportion of the palliative care market.
