Pancreatic Cancer is the uncontrolled growth of cells in the pancreas that divides and spreads to other parts of the organ. Pancreatic cancer occurs mostly to the people with smoking habit than non-smokers. Even diabetic people are also found to have pancreatic cancer but as a secondary risk factor next to smoking due to their age, mode of living and family history. The region of cancer in the pancreas determines what type of cancer it is, if it affects the part which makes digestive substance it is said to exocrine. If the affected area is that which makes insulin and hormone then it is said to be endocrine. Pancreas is present deep inside the digestive system behind the stomach.
