MARKET ANALYSIS

Due to the rising prevalence of cardiac disorders among children, the Americas, particularly the US, are predominantly dominating the global market for pediatric interventional cardiology in 2014. Due to key healthcare organizations in the APAC region making a flurry of investments in pediatrics and neonatology, particularly from China and India, this region is expected to experience the greatest growth rate over the projection period. The market for pediatric interventional cardiology in the APAC region is driven by better healthcare services, governmental healthcare reforms, and rising public awareness.

With a CAGR of 3.6% from 2018 to 2025, the market for pediatrics and neonatology primary care will climb from a 2017 valuation of 119700 million US dollars to 159600 million dollars by the end of 2025.

In The Netherlands, pediatrics care focuses on the treatment of kids between the ages of 0 and 18. Children must first see a general practitioner (GP), who will then give them a referral letter, in order to obtain pediatric and neonatology care. The Netherlands had 3.3 million children as of the first of the year, making up more than 19% of the country's overall population. In 2020, it is anticipated that 385,800 of these kids (or 11.5%) saw a pediatrician. This number is lower than in previous years (452,130 in 2019 and 447,075 in 2018) due to the COVID-19 pandemic, according to the website of the Dutch Healthcare Authority, which provides care and treatment data provided by Dutch hospitals (e.g, how many patients are diagnosed, the associated care products and care activities).
