MARKET ANALYSIS

The primary care physicians market was valued at USD 266.0 billion in 2022, with an expected 3.28% CAGR from 2023 to 2030. The growth is attributed to improved access to primary care, reducing healthcare costs and hospitalization rates. Primary care physicians offer early disease detection, chronic condition management, and preventive care. New models like direct primary care and concierge services aim to boost physician revenue by offering membership-based primary and preventive care, collaborating with Medicare and private insurers. Employed physicians mostly follow volume-based or mixed compensation models, but policymakers are pushing for value-based care. PCPs often work in small practices, but more are joining large physician groups or hospitals, with various ownership models.
