MARKET ANALYSIS

Polymer science is a fast-growing research field with a wide array of applications across many industries. The global polymer science market size was valued at USD 744.5 billion in 2018 and is expected to register a CAGR of 5.3% from 2019 to 2025. The market growth is primarily attributed to the increasing demand for advanced polymer materials in various end-use industries such as construction, automotive, packaging, and medical. In terms of region, the market has been classified into North America, Europe, Asia Pacific, Latin America, and Middle East & Africa. North America is the largest market for polymer science, followed by Europe and Asia Pacific. The market in North America is driven by the increasing demand for high-performance polymers from various end-use industries such as construction, automotive, and medical. The U.S. is the largest market for polymer science in the region. The Asia Pacific polymer science market is expected to witness the fastest growth during the forecast period, owing to the increasing demand for lightweight and high-performance materials from various consumer electronics and automotive industries. ABOUT VENUE

London is both England's and the United Kingdom's largest capital. It is situated on the Thames in southeast England at the head of an estuary that stretches for 50 miles (80 km) down to the North Sea and has been a prominent community for two millennia.

The City of London, which is the city's final and historical centre, was established by the Romans as Londinium and still has borders from the Middle Ages. Since the 19th century, the term "London" has also been applied to the metropolitan region around this city, historically comprising the nations of Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, and Hertfordshire. The Greater London Authority is in charge of this region, which goes by the name Greater London. In the past, the national government and parliament were located in the City of Westminster, to the west of the capital city of London.

Since London is one of the world's global cities and has a large impact on its business, education, entertainment, fashion, finance, health care, media, tourism, and communication, it has been referred to as the capital of the world.
