Market Analysis

Mental disorders are one of the top public health challenges in the WHO European Region, influencing about 25% of the population consistently. In all countries, mental health problems are more prevalent among those who are most deprived. The WHO European Region therefore faces different difficulties affecting both the (psychological) well-being of the population and the provision and quality of care for people with emotional problems. Mental disorders are one of the hugest public health challenges in the European Region as measured by prevalence, burden of disease or disability. It has been estimated that psychological disorders affect more than a third of the population every year, and the most common is depression and anxiety. Depressive disorder is twice as common in women when compared to men. About 1–2% of the population are diagnosed with psychotic disorders, men, and women equally, and 5.6% of men and 1.3% of women have substance use disorders. In all countries, mental disorders tend to be more prevalent for those who are most deprived.

An important indicator of the disease burden on society and health systems is the contribution of specific groups to all chronic conditions (years lived with disability – YLDs). Depressive disorder alone is responsible for 13.7% of the disability burden, which is making it the leading chronic condition in Europe. This is followed closely by alcohol-related disorders (6.2%) in second place, Alzheimer's, and other dementias in seventh (3.8%), and schizophrenia and bipolar disorders in eleventh and twelfth position, each responsible for 2.3% of all YLDs.

People with mental disorders tend to have earlier mortality often dying more than 20 years younger than the general population. One reason is the high suicide rate, but the main factor is the high prevalence of chronic diseases such as cardiovascular diseases, cancer and diabetes, and poor access to and quality of treatment for those conditions in people with co-morbidities.
