Title: Facing the challenges in the management of a nursing school in order to ensure a better quality of care through good training: sharing of an experience from Cameroon.

By Asta Monglo
Former student from the Faculty of medicine and biomedical sciences of the University of Yaoundé-I and Higher Institute of Sahel-The University of Maroua, Cameroon

The training of health personnel in general and of nurses in particular requires a number of standards and inalienable principles. Follow and respect those rules put managers of training institutes in a situation of permanent difficulties to cope with the challenges. Deal with challenges related to General Administration and educational aspects of the training structure is not easy. In the developing countries such as Cameroon the task is more difficult.

What are the different managerial challenges facing and how to deal with? These are the two major issues to which we will try to answer in this essay. We will build on experience that we personally experienced during a decade as Director of nursing and midwifery of school in Maroua-Cameroon. The interest of such a presentation lies not only in the exchange of experience but also and above all, a political interest in sense that the reorientation of policies regarding training in fear developing countries be considered; economic interest in the efficient allocation of resources, social interest for clearer visibility of the role of other health professionals like nurses.

We will present step by step the health personnel training policy in Cameroon, the various challenges and difficulties (administrative-organizational, structural, educational...) before sharing our experience.

Biography

Asta Monglo has completed her SRN at age of 26 years in Garoua a nursing school and higher Diploma in Nursing Education in 1999 from the Faculty of Medicine and biomedical of the University Yaoundé I. In 2012 she completed her Master degree in Social Sciences in the University of Maroua. She is actually and independent consultant and steel following an online syllabus in Global Management with Robert Kennedy College and University of Salford. She is member of Cameroon Nursing Society, she presented several papers during nursing national conferences in Cameroun.