After spending over 15 years in the corporate world of Architecture, leading large multidisciplinary teams across many international projects, Martin realised that my mission in life would be to focus on helping organisations of people and individuals alike genuinely and authentically understand how to reach their full potential in life. Martin observed that many people struggle to optimise their real potential and live an uninspired and less fulfilling life merely because they have never been guided around applying alternative strategies of personal development.

For the last ten years, Martin has specifically studied human behaviour and leadership engagement to enhance support and engage with a change from an internal perspective that gives people a real-life application model that empowers them to fully and finally realise the power that lies within themselves.

In his work and research, Martin has studied Neuroscience, NLP, Cybernetics, Axiology, Neurochemistry and biology. Studied with human behaviour experts such as Dr John Demartini, Dr Bruce Lipton, Dr Joe Dispenza.

Martin is currently consulting for the Proctor Gallagher Institute of mind coaching and receives no less than ten speaking engagements a year to speak to audiences on leadership and vision with the application for change being the driving force.
It is Martin's life mission to impart with this knowledge and assist support and direct and one who is looking to understand their real potential by challenging their current thinking and help educate them around the power of the subconscious mind.
