

Impact of Pain patient's cancer on their Caregivers

ASBAYO Fatima
Université Sidi Mohamed Ben Abdellah, Fès, MAROC

The suffering of patients and caregivers is real in Oncology today, is a global suffering given the complexity and the multiplicity of aspects involving games during the trajectory of cancer and requires a holistic support of patients. That's suffering dislodges the world of care and is only an opportunity to interview the previous relationship.

Imaging by functional magnetic resonance techniques were used to identify today a network of brain areas activated in phenomena painful and had shown the close link between proven pain and pain experienced, live the pain and see the pain, seeing someone who has active regions similar in those who observes it, these activated areas are the emotional pain component and are all enabled by Visual means; However, the caregiver uses his body mirrored the body of the patient, his emotions and his suffering in an emotional space.

The present study makes new contributions to our understanding of this emotional share experienced by caregivers in Oncology at the Morocco. To our knowledge it is the only study devoted exclusively to this type of suffering caused by the confrontation with physical pain and psychic patients with cancer and so far no research has not quite centered on the idea that suffering is contagious and that the individual suffering repercussions on the environment also the effects of the pain of the patient on caregivers in Oncology.
