TOURISTS ATTRACTIONS

Pearl Harbor and USS Arizona Memorial:

This memorial to those who perished with the sinking of the USS Arizona, stands above the remains of the sunken ship. Some portions can be seen protruding up from the water. The Visitors Center provides historical information on the harbor and the Japanese attack, and a ferry shuttles visitors out to the actual memorial. The Battleship USS Missouri is also docked here and visitors can walk the ship's deck.

Waipio Valley:

One of the most scenic spots on the Big Island of Hawaii is the lookout over Waipio Valley. Surrounded by lush cliff walls the fertile valley opens out to the ocean, where the black sand beach is met with white waves and blue water. The high viewpoint gives an awesome perspective.

Haleakala National Park:

Located on Maui, Haleakala National park offers access to the inactive Haleakala Volcano which stands at over 10,000 feet. Views from the summit stretch across the entire island and are particularly beautiful at sunrise. The dormant crater is also exposed, showing a lunar-like landscape.

Maui Ocean Center:

The Maui Ocean Center allows visitors a chance to see close up what lies beneath the ocean's surface. Sharks, rays, turtles and all kinds of interesting sea life are presented in huge aquariums. A walk through glass tunnel is a favorite feature at the facility.

Mauna Kea:

The highest mountain in Hawaii, Mauna Kea offers some unique sights for this tropical paradise. Snow and skiing are not uncommon during the winter months. A rough road, suitable for 4 wheel drive vehicles, provides access to the summit, which is also home to the Mauna Kea Observatory.

Hana Road:

The dramatic Hana Road on Maui is a scenic stretch of highway that runs from Pa'ia, through lush forests and along the ocean, to the remote town of Hana. This trip is worthwhile both for the stunning drive and to see the town itself. Hana's location, relatively cut off from the rest of the island, has allowed it to maintain more of a traditional Hawaiian culture than other towns.

Polynesian Cultural Center:

Located on Oahu, less than an hours drive from Honolulu, is the Polynesian Cultural Center. Through music, dance, craft demonstrations, and games, the center portrays the culture and daily life of the Polynesian islanders in Hawaii, Tahiti, Marquesas, Tonga, Samoa and Fiji as well as that of the Maoris in New Zealand. The center is divided into sections representing each of these locations. Many of the performers come from the islands which they represent, providing a high degree of authenticity. Visitors can tour the facility during the day or see a show in the evening.

Hawaii Volcanoes National Park :

There are five active volcanoes in the state of Hawaii and four of them are on Big Island. The one to watch is Kilauea Volcano, which has been erupting continuously since 1983 and considered one of the most active volcanoes in the world. Get a good view of the crater from the 11-mile Crater Rim Drive, which circles the summit caldera. For a bigger thrill, drive the Chain of Craters Road (19 miles) that descends 3,700 feet to the coast and watch the lava enter the ocean.

Maui Nui:

The road to the 10,023-foot summit of the dormant volcano Haleakala isn't for the weak. Those in the know get there early (often by 4:30 a.m.), suffer the white-knuckle drive, dress in winter hats and gloves, and carry thermoses of hot coffee. It's all worth it for that pure magic moment when the sun peaks out above the clouds. New regulations require a reservation for sunrise viewings, so book early to ensure you can work it into your visit. And whatever you do, don't confuse the summit drive to Haleakala on Maui Nui with the eastern entrance that is hours away past Hana. When it's over, wait out the line of cars snaking back down the mountain with a quick stop at the half-mile Pa ka'oao trail for a different view.

Molokini:

Hop on an early morning catamaran to Molokini. The small, crescent moon-shaped island is actually a partially submerged volcanic crater and a state Marine Life Conservation District and Hawaii State Seabird Sanctuary. Reef-filled waters make it a prime spot for snorkelers and divers who love the clear visibility of more than 250 marine species. Bird-watchers can expect to see Wedge-tailed Shearwaters and Bulwers Petrels nesting on the rocky shores.

Weather
