Vision & Plan

International Market Approach

Irish Research company GMR Data just published their biennial report that outlines this key market, detailing which areas are set to grow and why. Their research shows that the US has the largest market for dermatology and is also forecast to be the leading market through 2028; GMR Data forecasts $12.3 billion in 2018 growing to $22.6 billion in 2028.The US is a prime target for brand drug manufacturers due to strong patent laws and high per capita health spending. US government data shows that the US has the highest total healthcare spending per capita globally, with $9,403 across 2014.

The global dermatology devices market size was valued at over USD 9.6 billion in 2017 and is expected to showcase lucrative growth over the forecast period, registering a CAGR of 13.5%. Increasing prevalence of skin cancer and other skin diseases has significantly contributed to high demand for various dermatological diagnostic and treatment procedures in recent times, thereby spurring product demand.

Television, social media, and advertising have had a tremendous impact on consumers' paying increased attention to physical appearances and esthetics. This has also raised interest in a variety of cosmetic and esthetic surgeries and procedures. This, supported by surge in consumer disposable income and introduction of technologically advanced solutions, has had a major impact on market demand.

The third in a series of biennial Dermatology reports sees GMR Data again interview industry experts to produce a market leading report that dissects and investigates the key questions in the Global Dermatology Market across the next decade. GMR Data forecasts that the global dermatology (prescription) drugs market will report a CAGR of 6.4% across 2018 and 2028.Of the seven dermatological drugs types / segments highlighted in the report, Atopic Dermatitis and Skin Cancer are estimated to display the highest growth rates (10-year CAGR) of 12.8% and 9.2% respectively
