About Paris, France

Paris is the capital and most populous city of France, with an administrative-limits area of 105 square kilometers and a 2015 population of 2,229,621. The city is a commune and department, and the capital-heart of the 12,012 square kilometers (4,638 square miles) Île-de-France region (colloquially known as the 'Paris Region'), whose 12,142,802 2016 population represents roughly 18 percent of the population of France. By the 17th century Paris had become one of Europe's major centres of finance, commerce, fashion, science, and the arts, a position that it retains still today. The Paris Region had a GDP of €649.6 billion (US $763.4 billion) in 2014, accounting for 30.4 percent of the GDP of France. According to official estimates, the Paris Region has the fourth-highest GDP in the world and the largest regional GDP in the EU.

Around its historical heart, the small Île de la Cité, the City of Paris stretches on both sides of the Seine River, which divides it into two parts: the Rive Gauche (Left Bank, south) and Rive Droite (Right Bank, north). The city proper is but the core of a built-up area that extends well beyond its administrative limits. Commonly referred to as the agglomération Parisienne agglomeration has a 2013 population of 10,601,122, which makes it the largest in the European Union. City-influenced commuter activity reaches well beyond even this in a statistical a measure of metropolitan area, that had a 2013 population of 12,405,426, a number one-fifth the population of France, and one that makes it, after London, the second largest metropolitan area in the European Union.
