ABOUT PARIS

Paris, pronounced [paʁi], serves as the capital and most populous city of France. As of January 1, 2023, it is estimated to be inhabited by 2,102,650 people, spanning an area exceeding 105 km² (41 sq mi). This makes Paris the fourth-most populated city in the European Union and the 30th most densely populated globally as of 2022. Since the 17th century, Paris has held prominence as a major center for finance, diplomacy, commerce, culture, fashion, and gastronomy. Its pioneering role in the arts and sciences, as well as its early and extensive street lighting system, earned it the nickname "City of Light" in the 19th century. Situated at the heart of the Île-de-France region, Paris Region, the city contributes significantly to the region's estimated population of 12,271,794 individuals as of January 1, 2023, constituting around 19% of France's total population. With a GDP of €765 billion (US$1.064 trillion, PPP) in 2021, Paris Region boasts the highest GDP in the European Union.

Paris functions as a vital hub for railway, highway, and air transport, facilitated by two international airports: Charles de Gaulle Airport (Europe's third-busiest) and Orly Airport. Its subway system, the Paris Métro, established in 1900, accommodates a daily ridership of 5.23 million, ranking as Europe's second-busiest after the Moscow Metro. Additionally, Gare du Nord stands as the 24th-busiest railway station globally and the busiest outside Japan, having served 262 million passengers in 2015. Notably, Paris boasts one of the most sustainable transportation systems worldwide and is one of only two cities to have received the Sustainable Transport Award twice. Paris attracts visitors worldwide. The Louvre, with 8.9 million visitors in 2023, remains the world's most-visited art museum.
