Introduction:

Evidence demonstrates that services that are risky and of low quality prompt to decreased health outcomes and harm. Health services have seen an expanded emphasis on patient safety and quality healthcare following the 1999 assessment of health care related damage performed by the US Institute of Medicine (IOM). Procedures to enhance patient safety at the individual, institutional, and health-system level give entry points to outlining high dependability health care arrangements. Mediations have been created and conveyed by nations and associations, yet have been connected haphazardly, depending on the administrative setting and technical capacities of every setting. More resourced settings have adopted proactive strategies in executing this work, while low and medium income nations have considered patient safety something to address once key framework issues are settled.

Still, in the UK a pioneer in public health, recent estimations demonstrate that on average one occurrence of patient harm is reported every 35 seconds,1 while in the US, around 1.5 million patients are harmed and thousands killed every year because of hazardous medication.

The conference will be organized to bring together practitioners, administrators, policy makers, politicians and researchers within the field of primary health care and public health. Conference themes will focus on issues related with Innovation, Sustainability, Equity, Critical thinking and Uncertainty. Internationally there is increasing recognition of the importance of the primary care system for improving health outcomes and managing costs. Stronger primary health systems are associated with better health outcomes and lower costs, particularly for children. Improved primary health and community support also has the potential to prevent hospital admissions, particularly for ambulatory sensitive conditions. As well, better primary health and community support can also prevent inappropriate and unnecessary use of residential care services.
