About Sao Paulo, Brazil

Sao Paulo is both the name of a state, as well as, a city. Those born in the city of Sao Paulo are called "Paulistanos." Those born in the state of Sao Paulo but, not in its capital, are called "Paulistas." To illustrate, there are three "Paulistanos" soccer teams in the first division of the national league: Portuguesa, Sao Paulo and Corinthians, which is the only billionaire soccer club in brazil Accordingly, there are two "Paulistas" soccer teams in Brazil's Series A: Ponte Preta and Santos FC.

Sao Paulo state has 645 municipalities and a population of approximately 40 million inhabitants. According to IBGE, Brazil's main government research institute, the population in the city of Sao Paulo is about 11 million inhabitants. If we take into account the metropolitan area, which includes 38 smaller cities around the capital, the population is almost 19,000,000 inhabitants. In Brazil, 81.3% of the population lives in urban areas even though the amazon rainforest covers up to 57% of the total area of Southern hemisphere's largest country. This urban concentration helps to explain why it is more expensive to rent an office in Sao Paulo than in New York City.

Sao Paulo metropolitan region totals 847 thousand students enrolled in institutes of higher education (mainly colleges and universities), 90% are enrolled in private institutions and 10% in public ones. According to Sindata, which provides data about Sao Paulo education ecosystem, there are 202 private institutions of higher education and 20 public one in Sao Paulo metropolitan area, representing a growth of 47% in the total of institutions of higher education since 2000
