Endocrinology-2013

OMICS Group Conferences
Accelerating Scientific Discovery

World Congress on Endocrinology

August 26-28, 2013 Raleigh, North Carolina, USA

PCOS Awareness Association: It's a Cysterhood

Megan M. Domino
PCOS Awareness Association, USA

Abstract

Research shows that 1 in 10 women worldwide suffer from Polycystic Ovarian Syndrome (PCOS) and over half of them do not know they have it. The symptoms of PCOS vary women to women and can elude physician's diagnoses.

The mission of PCOS Awareness Association (PCOSAA) is to provide information, support and resources to sufferers of PCOS and their families, friends and supports systems.
PCOSAA's goals are to get more women tested, to connect them with specialists and others that can help them with their symptoms of PCOS, to inform the public about the severity of PCOS, to help fund research of PCOS and most of all to join PCOS sufferers with one another.

Biography

Born in Boston, Megan grew up in Renton, Washington where she learned to play the piano and clarinet. She rode horses, played basketball and was a normal kid. About to earn her degree in business, Megan has great aspirations.

She began working in office management by accepting a position at the corporate office one of the world's leading hotel chains. From there she continued on her career path and advanced to a position with Boeing. Megan is a new bride having married the love of her life in December 2011.

Helping others has been the underlying theme of her life ever since she was young. In business she mentors her co-workers. At home she strives to make a good life for her and her new husband. Megan works hard to put her personal signature on every project she takes on.

Overcoming adversity is no stranger to Megan. In 2001 she was diagnosed with PCOS (Polycystic ovary syndrome) and suffers from all the associated symptoms. Megan also has Hemoglobin C blood disease. She set out on a quest for answers and found that thousands of women were also searching. She formed PCOS Awareness Association to connect women with each other, provide resources and create public awareness.

Today Megan lives life to the fullest despite the medical issues. She inspires others to do the same. Her motto is LIVE – LOVE – LAUGH.