About Destination Madrid

Madrid is the capital and biggest city of Spain, situated in the focal point of the Iberian Peninsula plain 646 meters above ocean level and traverses a sum of 698 km² (233.3 sq. mi). The number of inhabitants in the city is approximately 3.2 million (2012); the whole populace of the metropolitan zone.

Madrid's most mainstream goals are midway found. The core of the city is Puerta del Sol considered a symbol of Madrid, an expansive square filling in as the scene of celebrations, vital social events and road entertainers and also a center point for people in general transportation organize. Another important square is Plaza Mayor, known for its numerous souvenir shops, bistros and the energetic San Miguel market; it's turned into a famous nightspot where guests and local people gather to enjoy beverages and tapas, or canapés and there are a lot of lesser-known spots that are well worth going to as well. All things considered, even the best-laid plans have a tendency to get overlooked following a few days as you slip into the swing of the city.
