Phuket City is a city in the south-east of Phuket island, Thailand. It is the capital of Phuket Province. As of 2007 the city had a population of 75,573. It covers the subdistricts (tambon) Talat and Talat Nuea of Mueang Phuket district. Phuket is 862 km (535.6 mi) south of Bangkok. Phuket is one of the oldest cities in Thailand. It was an important port on the west of the Malay Peninsula where Chinese immigrants first landed. The old buildings in Phuket town indicate its former prosperity. They were constructed when tin mining was an important on the island. The architectural style, called “Sino-Portuguese”, is European mixed with Chinese modern. Characteristic is a single or two-storey building with a narrow front compensated for by considerable depth.
