Explore Rome

The city of Rome is located in the central-western part of the Italian Peninsula on the banks of the Tiber River in the Lazio region being the capital of Italy. Mediterranean climate prevails in Rome characterized by dry and hot summers, and humid, cold winters. The pleasant climate of Rome favours heavy tourist footfall in the city throughout the year.

Rome is considered as a major European Union and international financial, cultural, and business centre. Primarily the technology sector, telecommunications, pharmaceutical and food industries are the most blooming ones. It is notably the international centre for higher education, having abundant academies, colleges and universities and being a major educational and intellectual centre from the ancient era.
