Italy's capital, Rome, also serves as the regional capital of Lazio. It is also the most populous commune in the nation, with 2,876,051 inhabitants spread across 1,285 km^2 (496.1 sq. mi). According to the population within the city limits, it is the fourth most populated city in the European Union. It serves as the administrative hub for the 4.3 million-person Metropolitan City of Rome. Rome is situated in Lazio (Latium), in the central-western part of the Italian Peninsula, on the Tiber River's banks. Rome has frequently been referred to as the capital of two states since the Vatican City; the only living example of a country within a city is an independent state inside the city limits of Rome.

The history of Rome encompasses 28 eras. Rome was supposedly founded around 753 BC, according to Roman mythology, but the location has been inhabited for much longer, making it one of the continent's oldest continuously inhabited settlements. Early residents of the city were a mixture of Latins, Etruscans, and Sabines. After some time, the city eventually rose to prominence as the capital of the Roman Kingdom, Roman Republic, and Roman Empire. It is now regarded as the origin of Western civilization and by some as the first metropolis in history. Roman poet Tibullus initially referred to it as The Eternal City (Latin: Urbs Aeterna; Italian: La Ciudad de Eterna) in the first century BC. Ovid, Virgil, and Livy also adopted the term.
